

JEWISH CEMETERY MOENCHSDEGGINGEN IN BAVARIA - GRAVE LIST

VERSION 04

compiled by Rolf Hofmann (HarburgProject@aol.com) + Martina Illian-Woerle MA

From 1671 until 1833 Jews of Moenchsdeggingen shared the Jewish cemetery in Harburg with the Jewish communities of Harburg and Ederheim. Between 1833 and 1881 they finally had their own burial site in Moenchsdeggingen. Around 1875 most Jews had left Moenchsdeggingen for the bigger cities, quite a few of them heading for Noerdlingen. During the 1870s the Jewish cemetery of Moenchsdeggingen was also used by the Noerdlingen Jewish Community until their own burial ground was established in 1878. The last interment in Moenchsdeggingen took place in 1881.

The allocation of male and female graves is remarkable. Row 1 (graves 001-024) is strictly female, and so is row 5 (graves 106-122), row 3 is mixed (graves 051-054 male - graves 055-076 female), rows 2 + 4 + 6 are strictly male (graves 025-050 + 077-105 + 126-130), only with grave 041 as female exception. The children's graves (134-150) are set aside and are not part of the original setting of the grave structure. Finally, graves 131-133 are strangely enough part of the children's section, and it's not sure if these were the original sites of these graves.

This gravelist is based on Martina Illian-Woerle's intensive research on the Hebrew inscriptions of this cemetery's grave monuments. Furthermore a gravelist compiled by Henry Hoechstatter during the 1880s gave valuable genealogical details. Other sources (to mention only a few) were the 19th century Jewish vital records of Moenchsdeggingen and taxlists of the 18th and 19th century. But too many of the available vital records are of poor legibility, and parts of them even don't exist at all, because the originals (taken away by the Nazis) disappeared after microfilm copies were made, and only these microfilms survived World War II, but they are not complete at all.

As some of the grave inscriptions have become illegible over many decades and the vital records have proved incomplete, it was very difficult in some cases to identify the deceased. Besides that most of the deceased added Christianized names to their originally given traditional names. The gravelist displays these every day names, which are not always identical with the traditional names on the front side (= heading east) of the grave monuments, but which were commonly used by these people and their families.

Regarding legibility of grave inscriptions it's important to mention that Martina Illian-Woerle in 1983 still was able to read complete Hebrew inscriptions on sandstone gravemonuments, which 14 years later (when the cleaning process + foto documentation took place) had turned partially or even completely illegible due to weathering. The condition of the limestone gravemonuments is generally far better, as they proved to be more resistant to wind, heat and frost.

Combing various sources allowed identification of the deceased even in cases where headstones don't exist any more.

In 1997 all gravestones were cleaned thoroughly and carefully with official permission. This project was initiated, organized and payed by Harburg Project, followed by a complete colour foto documentation with high quality legibility of the grave inscriptions. This foto documentation has so far never been published and still is outstanding and unique for the Swabish part of Bavaria, displaying the original simple beauty of these grave monuments, which in the meantime again have lost their legibility due to weathering.

The compilation of family history aspects was done very carefully, but errors are unfortunately inevitable, as poor legibility of sources often enough leads to mere speculation.
